

Senior Project Manager: International Infectious Disease

Part time or Full time opportunity for trained investigator to conduct studies concerning antimicrobial use and resistance.

Qualifications:

Ph.D. and /or M.D. with at least three years of post-doctoral experience in microbiology, biostatistics and population biology with a specialty in infectious disease or related discipline. Project management experience; peer reviewed publications and grant development experience and bioinformatics skills preferred. Fluency in Spanish, French, or other foreign language a plus.

Responsibilities:

Works with or as principal investigator on NIH and other large grants.

- Designs scientific/clinical research objectives
- Oversees research implementation and consultant work
- Analyses laboratory and clinical data
- Develops and applies statistical methodologies for analyzing data
- Engages expert scientific advisory board
- Prepares and presents reports
- Develops articles for peer review publication
- Identifies funding opportunities and prepares related grant proposals
- Assists with organizational partnerships and strategies
- Performs site visits to foreign laboratories and research sites (5-10% travel)

The Alliance for the Prudent Use of Antibiotics (APUA) is a global public health organization dedicated to improving antimicrobial use through research and education. Founded in 1981 and located on the Tufts Medical School campus in Boston, APUA conducts its research and education programs in coordination with affiliated chapters in over 60 countries and the leading national and international public health organizations.

Please forward resume and cover letter to:

No phone calls please

APUA – Human Resources
75 Kneeland Street
Boston, MA 02111-1901
apua@tufts.edu

Visit www.apua.org for more information about the Alliance for the Prudent Use of Antibiotics.

Revised 7/24//09